Poverty in the Nation and States

Poverty status is determined by comparing annual income to a set of dollar values called “thresholds” that vary by family size, number of children, and age of householder. If a family’s before-tax money income is less than the dollar value of their threshold, then that family and every individual in it are considered to be in poverty. For people not living in families, poverty status is determined by comparing the individual’s income to his or her threshold. The poverty thresholds are updated annually to allow for changes in the cost of living using the Consumer Price Index (CPI-U). They do not vary geographically.

Since income is reported for the previous 12 months, the appropriate poverty threshold for each family is determined by multiplying the base-year poverty threshold (1982) by the average of monthly CPI values for the 12 months preceding the survey month.

Poverty

The 2009 American Community Survey (ACS) data indicate an estimated 14.3 percent of the U.S. population had income below its poverty threshold in the past 12 months. This is 1 percentage point higher than the 13.3 percent poverty rate estimated for the 2008 ACS. According to the ACS, the estimated number of people in poverty increased by 3.5 million to 42.9 million.

Poverty rates from the 2009 ACS for the 50 states and the District of Columbia ranged from a low of 8.5 percent in New Hampshire to a high of 21.9 percent in Mississippi. Only five states had estimated poverty rates lower than 10 percent. They were Alaska, Connecticut, Maryland, New Hampshire, and New Jersey. On the other side of the distribution, five states had estimated poverty rates at or above 17 percent in 2009. They were Alabama, Arkansas, Kentucky, Mississippi, and West Virginia.

rate. In the 2009 ACS, 18.9 percent of people in the United States had income less than 125 percent of their poverty threshold, compared to 17.6 percent in the 2008 ACS. The percentage of people with income less than 50 percent of their poverty threshold increased from 5.6 percent in the 2008 ACS to 6.3 in the 2009 ACS. Tennessee saw poverty levels increase by 116,579 persons from 2008 to 2009. Of that amount, there was an increase of 36,780 citizens less than 18 years old (see Page 2). In both years studied, Tennesseans that are under the poverty threshold were greater than 20 percent of the U.S. average in all categories. This included those less than 18 years old.

This data is part of a larger collection of information from the 2009 ACS. The ACS is part of the U.S. Bureau of the Census. More information about how poverty is calculated in the ACS is available at www.census.gov/hhes/www/poverty/methods/definitions.html .

Highlights

Thirty-one states saw increases in both the number and percentage of people in poverty between the 2008 and the 2009 ACS. No state had a statistically significant decline in either the number in poverty or the poverty
